2 Substance Abuse Contact Hours Offered

If you thought the only drugs endangering young people are found on street corners, think again. Some of the most lethal drugs are items you probably have around your house or that they can buy at a nearby store. From nail polish remover to spray paint, there are lots of items that kids and teens turn to for that Household High. Inhalant abuse is growing. Kids think it is harmless, but they could die from just one high. Learn how to identify the signs of a household high, see what items people use to get the buzz, discover the dangers that can be associated with just one use, and learn the best ways to teach both adults and children about inhalants. Also, see how coalitions can educate people in their communities to help them realize the dangers of drugs don't just lurk on street corners.

The first hour of this workshop is spent viewing the broadcast, Household Highs, as a group. The second hour of the workshop provides an opportunity the attendees to discuss issues brought up in the broadcast, and share ideas about concerns surrounding this topic.

PLEASE NOTE:

Attendees MUST BE present at the MISD for broadcast and discussion to receive substance abuse contact hours.
